We have before now, expressed our surprise at the shuffling policy which seems be so characteristic of some of the highest official members of our Government. They know their power, and they never fail assert their importance. The farce of Tuesday is only another manifestation that line of action which has been adopted all through this unfortunate typhoon business. When it is remembered what attempts were made in the end of the year by the then Acting COLONIAL SECRETARY to reject the protest on technical grounds when it was first brought forward, and how even the discussion of the subject was met captious opposition, the action COLONIAL SECRETARY on Tuesday is not quite well that the functions of the non-official members in the Legislative Coun-They may take their scats at the table, and vote for measures which, in the very constitution of the Council, would be carried whether they voted or not, but they must behave themselves and not ask any imperan official proceeding, they only meet with supercilious, evasive, or vapid replies. "You may say what you like, and we shall do what we like" is the Napoleonic dictum which the Government has hitherto followed with respect to the non-official mombers. The latter are looked upon, in fact, as mere ciphers but in spite of this, surely their nominal position-for it is purely nominal-ought to- ensure for them a little more consideration from those who are only after an easy thing for one man to be civil to another; and it would be as well, perhaps, for those occupying official positions here to endeavour in future to treat matters in which the whole community are interested in a better and more liberal spirit. During the last few days they had arranged to cancel the lease upon the mud docks at Whampon. They bad been paying a rent of $2,000 a year for them, and there was nine years of the lease to run, but it had been cancelled for the sum of $4,000. The directors, in this arrangement, had stipulated that the dooks should never be made available for the purpose of receiving vessels of European build. He was prepared to answer any questions, and find now merely to suggest that the balance which appears to the account all the servants of the public. He was happy to be able whatever difficulty there might be, it was not at not all owing in any way to the conduct of the board of directors for a long, long time past (applause) He would not go back and rake up old times to the memory of those present. They had to sider its prosperity, and not whether this person or that person might suffer inconvenience or grappled boldly with the difficulty-he knew it was a difficulty-and said "we appeal to you the debt." Let them look at the position in which they stood. They had $190,000 upon a mortgage, exclusive of a debt of $34,000 to Her Majesty's Government. It appeared that this latter debt stood under unastertained circumtances, because it was given in the liabilities as an estimated amount of interest instead of a real amount. Now this amount at 6 percent, amounted to $11,500 a year. He purposely abstained from quoting figures from former reports, as the Their available profits for the balf year were $37,000. Well let any one of them double that amount—he dared say it would be a fair they had also gained by it-or let them say that $80,000 were the available profits for the year. Now if the $18,000 or $14,000 interest were added to this, it would emple them to declare a very handsome dividend, if the debt was wined out. Therefore it was incombent on them to reduce this debt at all times and in conourably. The Chief Justice said : I have had occasion very often to decide upon cases which in no way differ so far se I can see in principle from the present case. I was therefore desirous that the opinion of another judge should be formally requested Mr. Justice Snowden, contrary to our usual-habit, to give a written judgment in this case without our previously discussing the question in any way together. That opinion he bas just delivered. I feel bound to concur in the conclusion to which Mr. Justice Snowden has come. To decide otherwise would be to decide contrary to a long series of authorities binding on this Court, most of which were relied on by Mr. Toller, In the present case I caunot accede to the ingenious argument of Mr. Brerston that the applicant having only a lisp, he b parting with the possession of the goods and the bill of lading to his debtors lost his lien. That might possibly have been the case if he had ported with that possession without any condition; but he did annex a condition to the right of possession which he gave to the incolvent debtors, that is a trust, and no trust attached, he intended no possession to pass to thom; therefore I consider the possession given by the applicant to be the same as if he being the unpaid vendor, had sent the goods to the debtors coupled with a trust attached. In most of the former cases the trust was created by the "Manphester invoice headings." In this case the trust was created by a letter enclosing the son, R. For instance, it accuses the Herald. in the same breath, with want of principle, and of fanatical Ultramontanism, besides showing in reference to American affairs, so far as cornalism, manners, and religion are concerned; an amusing ignorance which causes it to apply a German standard to these matters. If it were true that the said article could win for the Herald several hundreds of subscribers from the readers of the Nord-Denstone Zeitung. the last mentioned would certainly be able to see the difference between the two papers, and become convinced that it is nossible to publish Sin .- For the information of the subscribers a great political newspaper without continually vitaperating the opposing political and religious parties of which a great commonwealth

"Besides, calumnations do not belong to the rofessional tools of a great political newspaper. The official organ of Prince Bismarck, declaring the New York Herald to be the organ of Ultramontanism overlooks the fact that Ultramontabism, as such, is entirely unknown in the United States. We have Cutholics and Protesfants, and they live as peacefully with each foreign to us as the idea of Muckerthum, for soribers, and this amount will be handed to the jonly statesmen but also great political papers, families of the two Chinese onitors who jought to be above the small squabbles of partics or sects, and our common-wealth has according to their own ways of thinking, without the guidance or superintendence of the Government.

"In contradiction to these actual facts, the

Yord-Deutsche Zeitung not only knows that the Herald is the organ of Ultramontanism and the Jesnits, but also that all its obief editors frequently attend mass. Perhaps it was the hidden purpose of the Nord-Deutsche Zeitung to propare an agreeable new year's surprise to the ought to have extended its joke, and to have added that there is in the palace of the Herald in New York a magnificent chapel; that an especial Jesuit is retained there, not only to read mass every day, but also to make his influence felt wherever the Herald connections roach; may, that there is even a reasonable presumption that the latest expedition of the New York Herald to Central Africa. under the well-known Herald correspondent, Mr. Stanley, is much less meant for the exploration of the sources of the Nile than for the foundation of an Ultramontane Church among the Central African blacks. But, even without such further ornamental notions the audacious assertion respecting journalism and religion remains a great idea of the Kord Deutsche not produce anything except nonsonse. How fiercely would the alleged clerical editors of the Herald have ground their teeth when they saw only for Archbishop Manning as the Nord Destache Zeitung so well knows how to tell its (which the Nord Deutsche Zeitung discreetly keeps back), the Herald thus enabling both opponents to publish their coinions in one and the same paper; and if it be true that the proper business of the Hevald consists in attacking the German Empire us the arch-enemy of the Catholic religion, then the Word Deutsche Zeilung unknowing dispovered the trail of a world-wide plot: for to the editors of the Herald belong Cataolies and Protestants, Christians Zeitung fanutically united in one design to aproot the German Empire.

"Yet amidst all this nonsense is to be found one grain of truth. It is in the acknowledgment that the New York Herald commands enormous wealth, by the aid of which the richest material is gathered without any consideration of expense. That is true. The means of the New York Herald amount at least to as much as the entire German Reptile Fund, but there is a great difference between the ways in which these respective money powers have been sequired and used. The means of the Herald are the income of a New York business man, well acquired by two generations, whereas the Reptile Fund consists of the revenues of a German King deprived of his throne and the use his fortune. The Herald uses its mouns not only for journalistic purposes but also for scientific explorations and humanistic purposes of the most varied sort, whereas the Reptile Fund is exclusively used to influence public

" As far as the alleged connection of the New York Herold with Count Arnim is concerned, here is no connection whatever between them. The side-taking of the Herald with Count Arnim finds its simple explanation in the humane characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race to help the weak and oppressed. The Nord Deulsche Zeitung need not go to New York to seek and find an tive sympathy with Count Arnim. It need on pursue such independent foreign papers as are not kept alive out of the Repule Fund, be it through each payments, be it through officious correspondents. The New York Herald has received no presents from Count Arnim, and the latter has given no obligations to the Herald The Herald is rich enough to pay for cable telegrams, even to the value of a nobleman's estate, out of its own means. The correspondents of the Herald are sufficiently salaried to be enabled to fulfil their duties without saking for souvenirs. THE GIANT ANGER. A child knelt down in the forest dark Where no human eye would see But a simbeam crept through a blond that passed. And flashed through the gray old tree, As it fell on the child's bright, upturned face, And heard his low, sweet prayer. Like a glory it shone through the dark, cold place, Till the boy seemed an angel there.

The proper of the child was a sad, low hymn For forgiveness, hope and trust, And he wept as he told of care and sin, Till the flowers their sweet belle hushed. For he spoke of a giant, who, day by day, Followed him everywhere; Who whispered of serrow, pain, and wrong,

And filled his heart with care. Who tempted him evil things to do. . Harsh, cruel words to say Destroyed the flowers he loved so well: Frightened his birds away. Then the low, and voice grew hushed in tears.

And so quiet his spirit grew, That a purple twilight filled the wood,

And the flowers seemed praying too. And he came each day that prayer to say. Till the minut's strength was fied, And it seemed an angel through the wood, His gentle footsteps led; The soft moss ourled about his feet. Each flower's trembling hand Struck welcome on its tiny harp,

That he could understand. Would you know the angel that would make The dark wood seem so light; And the cruel giant that destroyed All things so pure and bright? Anger is the giant's name; He killed the hirds and flowers. He sorrows with his svil words,

Would you know the angel that can drive The cruel fiend away? That gentle spirit over comes When the heart doth humbly pray? And like an ungel, by the hand It leads us through the world,

Far older hearts than onre.

And guides us to that hidden strand, Where sorrow's wing is furled, .- From "Speciacles for Young Eyes."
